Environment and innovation

How to use the environment to achieve innovative competences?

The term ‘innovative learning environment’ means much more than a classroom. You can think about companies and institutions where students will do their practices, school yards, networks, digital blended learning environments, schools and so on.

The theme of the study days is called ‘How to achieve the environment to develop innovative competences’. The idea is to get in touch with the participants and have dialogues and workshops about innovations in didactical approaches in the classroom, innovations in land based school organizations and probably most important in the authentic field of companies, labour market, etc. Connecting different worlds is becoming more and more important and asks for specific competences. We would like to show examples of different learning environments, both on classroom-level and in the field. In interactive sessions we want to connect innovations, educational approaches and experiences of the participants in different countries.

We will stay in Wageningen, which is a very innovative heart in The Netherlands in the field of learning and agriculture. Stoas is removed to a modern building (an example of a learning environment). The idea is to organize a plenary session and excursion in the context of innovative learning environments. On the first day we will create a real interactive workshop session in different parallel groups. Topics in the workshops will be have a direct connection with the main theme of the study days.
